The International Society for Applied Biology 14th Biennial Meeting

April 2-5, 2014
Tudor Arms Doubletree Hotel
Cleveland, Ohio

Nationally and internationally respected investigators whose research work is relevant to translational cardiovascular biology will present their latest research results to address topics including critical issues in the clinical implementation of cell-based therapies for cardiovascular disease and the potential clinical relevance of stem cell therapies and their translation into the clinic; new research findings in cardiovascular mechano-biology and pathobiology and their implications in clinical care; the interactions of biomaterials with tissues and their implications in improving cardiovascular device design and utilization; novel cardiovascular diagnostics, imaging and therapeutics and their relevance to clinical care; and, barriers and solutions to issues of translation, regulatory science and commercialization.

A satellite program preceding the conference will be held at the Lerner Research Institute on the campus of the Cleveland Clinic entitled "Stem Cells for Disease Modeling and Regenerative Therapeutics."

An objective for the meeting is to encourage submission of abstracts and participation by young scientists throughout the world who are considering a career relevant to applied or translational cardiovascular research. Five Allan D. Callow, M.D., Ph.D. Young Investigator Awards will be presented to authors of these outstanding research submissions. To qualify for the Young Investigator Award, the presenting author must be responsible for the scientific content of the abstract and be in a "training" program (postdoctoral fellow, resident, graduate student or medical student). The abstracts of all Young Investigator Award applicants will be reviewed and the authors of the top 5 ranked abstracts will receive the awards.
